| 1 | I think sports should be a unifying endeavour at the Olympics. I think expressions of certain political/sexuality/racism etc., do have a role, but should perhaps be limited in scope: for example opening and closing ceremonies where everyone has equal access. Not everyone makes it to a podium for example. | 12/4/2020 5:31 PM |
| 2 | We allow all genders and races to participate and give them an equal chance, we should be an example and spread this to the world.  | 12/2/2020 5:09 PM |

V6 How do you feel about the following statement: On the podium, I would like to enjoy my moment of glory and I don't want anything to draw attention away from that:

V7 How do you feel about the following statement: With demonstrations on the field of play, at the Olympic Village or during the official ceremonies, the dignity and the harmony of the competition or the ceremony in question is diminished for the athletes concerned:

| 1 | Again, I think you cannot put a blanket statement on this: demonstrations could be allowed in certain venues (I would say mostly out of competition) and on an individual level perhaps. | 12/4/2020 5:31 PM |
| 2 | Spreading a message of unity and equality is going to raise the dignity and harmony.   | 12/2/2020 5:09 PM |

| 1 | Even if an athlete is required by competition rules to compete in a certain gender category, he/she/they should be allowed to compete under the name and pronoun they prefer (noted according to athlete preference in results, media, etc). Anti-Racism has historically been a part of the Olympic movement and values for inclusion. Politics and Religion have historically disrupted the games rather than brought positive light on the Olympic values, therefore I'm not convinced they have a place. | 12/4/2020 5:31 PM |
